The Worst Kind of Flirtation

Dorothy Dix Tells Girls Why It Is Both Foolish and Futile To Accept Attentions From Married Men.

most wrong to hersalf and other people is the girl who gets invesigled into a love affair with a married man. She is foolish because she is invariably the victim, because she is the one who has to pay the full price of the farnished romance: because she wasten her youth and the freshness of her affection on a man who cannot marry her if he would.

She makes a mistake because she puts herself in an equivocal position, and no girl comes out of such a situation without bedraggled skirts. Society takes small stock in platonic friendships between men and women and none at all in plantenic affection between a married man and a girl. The does wrong to other people because she is breaking up a home, and no woman has ever yet huit her house of happiness on the wreck of another woman happiness and found any peace and foy in it.

A Girl's Worst Enemy.

A girl's worst enemy could find no better way to destroy her than to induce her to fail in love with a married man, yet I know many girls who better way to destroy her than to induce her to fail in love with a married man as find they have an especial fascination for married men, and who keem it find a particular zest in flirting with them.

These girls think it great fun to carry on their firitations with married men anxious to seek as a wife worst and shriek with laughter as they tell how some fat, grirkled.

Of course, married men are often very handsome and fascinating, and they know how, to make fore beautiful who know how to make fore beautiful who know how to make fore beautiful who know how how to make fore beautiful who h

THE most foolish girl in the world, the one who makes the higgest mistake and the one who does the most wrong to herself and other people is the girl who gets invesigled into a love affair with a matried man. She is foolish because she is invariably the victim, because she is the first who has no pay the full price of the farmished romance, because she wasten her youth and the freshness of her affection on a man who cannot have falled in the first who has no pay the full price of the farmished romance, because she wasten her youth and the freshness of her affection on a man who cannot have falled in the first who could enjoy witnessing the suffering of a poor, believes wife, who knows all too well that her beauty and charms have faded while some girl young enough to be his daughter makes a fool of her husting the full price of the time of the faquisition, and would have made a lovely little torturer.

In the Wife's Plance.

Before you engage in a flirtation with a married man, girls, just put yourself in the wife's place. Some day you will be married. Think how you would feel if you saw some younger and prettier woman cajoling your husband away from you.

But you don't even have to be altrustic to perceive the wisdom of avoiding love affairs with married men. It's self-preservation. To begin with, it practically shuts the door to matrimony in your face.

The love time and the marriage time of a girl's life are short, and if you have the love time and the marriage time of a girl's life are short, and if you have the love the latter than the love time and the marriage time of a girl's life are short, and if you have the latter than the latter tha

A Remedy.

Of course, married men are often very handsome and fascinating, and they know how to make love beautifully, and just the nice little things to do that women like to have done for them, but when you find yourself listening to one—and enjoy listening when he begins to tell you that his wife doean't understand him, and how unhappy he is at home, and what your sympathy means to him, and so on, just citek your little finger in your cars, and take to your heefs.

You are not a public comforter, and such a man means you no good. He's willing to break your heart, to blight your prespects in life, to compromise your name just for his own amusement.

That is why I say, don't filtr with married.
